MILITANTS TAKE RIFLE PRACTICE

May Mean War With Authorities.

Official Hated by Women Has His House Guarded Against Neighbors.

London, Sept. 1.—A rifle range is the latest acquisition of the militant suffragettes.

The location is kept a close secret, but an official of the Woman's Social and Political Union has admitted its existence and stated that the range was in use every day by members of the organization, who are rapidly becoming expert shots.

This week's issue of the Suffragette, the official organ of the W. S. U. U., contains an advertisement offering to teach women to shoot straight. The official who gave the information in regard to the rifle range said that the militants were preparing for the next repressive step of the Government, which they fear will be the use of the recently enacted Mental Deficiency Bill to confine the suffragette leaders in asylums where they will not be amenable to the usual court procedures.

If any of the leaders are confined under the new act, the official in question declared, the resolution not to endanger human life would be rescinded and the skill acquired at the butt would be brought into play.

Home Secretary Reginald McKenna, the best hated of the Cabinet Ministers, because his department has been responsible for the forcible feeding of suffragettes and the enforcement of the Cat and Mouse Act, is living in a house almost surrounded by the homes of militant agitators.

Mrs. Emily K. Marshall, whose record for acts of violence is well known, recently moved into a house adjacent to the town residence of Mr. McKenna, and ever since the Home Secretary has had two stalwart policemen on guard over his windows. Mrs. Marshall does not deny that this precaution is altogether useless, for she declares that the Home Secretary's windows are a constant temptation to her.

Mrs. Marshall is the wife of the attorney for the Women's Social and Political Union, and the possessor of a long window-smashing record. She now has as neighbors two other militants, who this week leased houses within a few steps of the McKenna home, which is in Westminster, near the Houses of Parliament.

This influx of militants into the neighborhood, hitherto almost entirely given over to the homes of Cabinet Ministers and members of Parliament, has caused some alarm among the politicians whose opposition to woman's suffrage has brought them threats of vengeance. Mrs. Marshall has already served time for breaking windows in the homes of Cabinet officers, and she was arrested a few weeks ago for assaulting a Scotland Yard detective.

Mr. McKenna does not regard her as a desirable neighbor, nor does he care about her friends. She was asked for the names of her comrades who have taken the two houses so close to her own, but declined the information. She did, however, express the fervent hope that their presence wouldn't add to the comfort of the Home Secretary.

The deference of the police to a title which sometimes save a woman from arrest, even if she is a militant suffragette, and this fact was no sooner observed by the leaders in the women's campaign than it was put to effective use.

During one of the recent battles at the London Pavilion, while the suffragette detail of Scotland Yard was going thru its usual weekly exercise of arresting Mrs. Pankhurst, a number of her defenders were locked in a small room and placed under arrest. It happened that most of these women were subscription and advertisement solicitors for the Suffragette, and on account of their services to the official organ of the W. S. U. U. it was not desirable that they should go to jail.

The leader of the solicitors was a dignified and stately looking woman, and one of her companions secured her release by making use of this fact. While the woman were being charged at the police station, the stately solicitor was several times addressed as "Your Grace" by her companions. When her turn came to sign the prison register, the inspector in charge of the police declared that a mistake had been made and that he had no complaint to make against her. Then a constable was detailed to escort the pseudo-duchess to a taxicab.

The suffragettes charge that similar reasons led to the almost immediate discharge of Lady Sybil Smith who was arrested with Mrs. Pethick Lawrence while attempting a raid on the House of Commons.

Tribute to the Rev. Mell.

According to the law of the Methodist church, Rev. Mell has served his full time (which is four years) at Beaver Dam and will deliver his last sermon at this place the following Sunday September 7, and at Liberty church the second Sunday.

Rev. Mell is not only a preacher of ability, but a splendid citizen, always using his influence to help every cause which is uplifting to society, and the general welfare of the people. Beaver Dam people regret the going of this Godly man from their midst. Ever ready to help people to a better life, always a friend to the friendless and anxious to rescue the fallen.

Too much cannot be said of Mrs. Mell, who will be greatly missed. She has been interested in every department of church work, and has proven very efficient help. This couple have the best wishes of the people of Beaver Dam and wherever they may be, the people are to be congratulated on having two such people among them, who make it their every day business to help others to a Christian life, and to the Home Eternal.

WARNS AGAINST WOMEN VOTES

"Stop, Look, and Listen!" Says Representative Heflin, of Alabama.

Lynchburg, Va., Sept. 1.—Representative Heflin, of Alabama, flung another challenge to woman suffragists today when, in a Labor Day address here under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association, he pleaded for woman's work at home instead of at the ballot. He declared that "in the mad clamor for the ballot women are hazarding much and entering upon a perilous journey" and warned them to stop, look and listen.

"Ohio defeated woman suffrage by an overwhelming majority," said Mr. Heflin. "Michigan defeated it by a tremendous vote. New Jersey had woman suffrage and, by common consent of both men and women, abandoned it. The militant suffragettes of England in their rage of wild fanaticism are trampling upon the laws of God and man. They are committing assaults on English officials and burning the churches of the living God. Upon the home-loving, man-trusting, consecrated Christian women of the United States rests the safety of our institutions and the perpetuity of this republic."

"It is neither proper or necessary that women should vote. The exigencies of the occasion do not authorize or demand it. A woman suffragist said: 'I am fighting for my emancipation.' The emancipation she is seeking is emancipation from the plans of nature and the laws of God. The family is the social unit, the harmonious whole with one head, not two heads."

Summer of 1854 Makes That of 1913 Seem Cool.

The hot weather in 1913 is not a marker to the hot weather that prevailed during 1854, according to an old record.

This record shows that for seventy-one days of that year, from June 22 to September 17, the thermometer never registered less than 90 degrees, and for twenty-eight days it went above 100. The mean temperature for the seventy-one days was 96.43 and for twenty-eight days it was 101.53. The maximum temperature for the time covered by the record was 104 and the minimum 90.

SOMERSAULT IN THE AIR

Aviator Loops-the-Loop 1,500 Feet Up.

Had Perfect Control of Machine And Descends Without Trouble.

Versailles, France, Sept. 2.—The thrilling maneuver of turning a somersault in the air with an aeroplane flying at rapid speed, was repeated today by the French aviator Pegoud over the aerodrom at Duc, near here, with perfect success.

Pegoud had promised that his performance at Juvisy yesterday was not the result of an accident, but was a proof of proper control and also of the stability of the aeroplane. He carried out the daring feat with apparent ease again today in the presence of officers of the French army flying corps, about 10 military and civilian aviators and a large assemblage of the general public.

Pegoud ran his aeroplane into the center of the field and indicated to a battery of moving picture operators and newspaper photographers the part of the sky from which he would begin to fly with his head downward.

He then took his seat at the motor and rose in a spiral to a height of 3,000 feet. There he turned his aeroplane into a vertical position with its tail upward and drove down toward the earth like an arrow. When he had descended to an altitude of 1,500 feet he began with his machine to describe a vast letter "a."

The wheels of the aeroplane were clearly visible in the middle of the "a" sticking upward, while Pegoud could be seen hanging with his head down. The aviator sailed along in this position for about fifty seconds. Then his craft, with a great sweeping curve, came again into a horizontal position, this time with the aviator head upward. The silence, which hitherto had been disturbed only by the whirr of the motor, was broken by a tremendous cheer from the crowd.

Meanwhile Pegoud spiraled to the earth. He had been in the air only ten minutes altogether.

When Pegoud clambered from his seat a number of women presented him with flowers, while the aviators and military men crowded round to shake his hand. A number of his admirers bore him shoulder high to the aeroplane shed, where Pegoud, using a box as a platform, told the crowd of his experiences.

He declared that the motor was running at only quarter speed, while the aeroplane was upside down. He continued:

"The machine was completely under my control. I could have flown farther in the reversed position, but no object was to be attained by doing so. Besides, hanging downward for a long time brings the blood to the head, and would cause inconvenience."

"It is easily conceivable that some persons might immediately suffer from congestion, and thus lose control of the apparatus. I, however, felt no such danger."

The greatest lesson learned from Pegoud's feat, according to experienced aviators who witnessed it, is that no matter what position an aeroplane is thrown into while in the air by squalls or accidents to the machinery, and aviator, if he keeps his presence of mind, should be able to right the machine and volplane downward in safety.

SEEK PARDON FOR ALLEN

Convicted in Casey County in 1887 for Murder.

For Years Lived in Ohio County—Recently Arrested by Sheriff T. H. Black.

The following dispatch from Frankfort, concerning the effort being made to secure pardon for Richard Allen, of Casey county, will be of interest to many here. Mr. Allen for many years after his escape resided in Ohio county, and was recently arrested in Missouri by Sheriff T. H. Black, of Hartford, who had been sent by the son of Charles Tucker. Many people in Hartford and Ohio county signed the petition for Allen's pardon.

Frankfort, Ky., Sept. 2.—A strong petition for the pardon of Richard Allen, who escaped from the Casey county jail in 1887 while under sentence for killing Charles Tucker, and who was brought back to Kentucky and placed in the Frankfort Reformatory a few months ago at an expense of $300 to the State, the amount of reward offered by Acting Governor McDermott, was presented today to Gov. McCreary by W. M. Meyers, of Lincoln county, former Sheriff of Casey county, and Attorney P. C. Moore, of Liberty.

They tell an entirely different story of the killing of Tucker from that related by his son, Charles Tucker, at whose instance the reward was offered and Allen was brought back to Kentucky to serve his sentence. Tucker said a feud battle was about to be precipitated in the street of Liberty on the August election day, 1886, when his father, who he said was the friend of both factions, went between the opposing forces and attempted to restore peace, and that Dick Allen in a drunken frenzy broke away from those holding him and shot down his father.

Former Sheriff Meyers said there had been trouble between Tucker and the Allens and that before Dick Allen killed Tucker the latter had shot Bill Allen twice. Two of the Allen boys were tried and acquitted on peremptory instructions, he said and when Dick Allen was tried two material witnesses were missing.

"There was no mystery concerning Allen's whereabouts," said Mr. Meyers. "Everybody in Casey county who was at all interested, including Tucker's relatives, knew he went to Ohio county when he escaped from jail, and knew he was in Missouri. Members of Tucker's own family in Casey county wish Allen to be set free. Our petition is signed by William Herndon, of Lancaster, Commonwealth's Attorney when Allen was tried. Every county official in Casey and Ohio counties signed the petition, as did many citizens."

Charles Tucker, of Frankfort, the son of the man Allen killed called on Gov. McCreary to protest against the pardon.

Blind Man Sentenced For Seeing Silt Skirt.

Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 2.—M. J. McCarty, who wore a sign saying that he was "deaf, dumb and blind since childhood," has begun serving 100 days on the municipal farm, and all because he forgot his affliction and stared at an anile that showed through a silt skirt. J. W. West, a clerk, had just given McCarty a dime, and the mendicant was so absorbed in watching the handsome young woman who wore the silt skirt that West called the attention of a policeman to the beggar's actions.

Big Success.

Central City, Ky., Sept. 2.—Labor Day of 1913 in Central City will go down in its history as one of its most important days. There were at least 5,000 people in town, and about half traveled with the two brass bands out to the Central City Athletic Park to see the first aid field meet. Graham team carried off first prize, and the Kentucky Midland team, captained by Martin Vandiver, carried off third prize of $15. The second prize was tied for by the Echols, Taylor and Crescent teams, and on a second tryout was again tied for by the Taylor and Crescent teams, which divided the money given as a prize, amounting to $30.00. The Graham team was also awarded six bronze medals, one to each man, by the American Mine Safety Association of Louisville, and which it must win two more years in succession before it becomes the property of the winning team.

Good Roads Work Being Pushed.

Henderson, Ky., Aug. 29.—Farmers of Henderson County have volunteered their services with teams and men to assist the county in building a rock road on the Owensboro Road. There was not money enough to make a hard road if teams and men had to be hired therefore the experiment of having the farmers volunteer labor is being tried and is working successfully.

Resolutions were passed by the Henderson County Teachers' Institute, pledging each teacher to build a few yards of good roads in front of the school house. This is to impress the rising generation with the spirit of good roads.

The teachers also pledged themselves to work for a tuberculosis hospital in Henderson County and for $500 from the Fiscal Court for the extension of public library privileges.

State Militia to Receive $73,000

Washington, Aug. 29.—Kentucky's appropriation for the maintenance of the State militia was fixed today at $73,000 by the War Department. Indiana is given $87,000, West Virginia $47,000 and Tennessee $67,000. The announcement of the amounts allotted was made today by the War Department, and is made under two appropriations of $2,000,000 each, one for promotion of rifle practice, and arms, equipments and camp purposes, the other for supplies and ammunition. The money was apportioned according to enlisted strength, New York heading the list with 14,900. The Empire State will receive $376,000.

NIGHT RIDERS SEND THREATENING NOTES

Demand That Admission Fee for Religious Service in Crittenden Be Stopped.

Marion, Ky., Sept. 1.—The first attempt of night riders in Crittenden county to broaden the scope of their operations from tobacco matters alone to other affairs came yesterday when the committee in charge of Hurricane camp meeting, sixteen miles north of here, received threatening letters demanding that they drop their custom of charging admission at the gates of the camp grounds.

In order to defray the expenses of the meeting, which has been an annual affair for many years to charge a small gate fee on the two Sundays during which the meeting was on.

The plan had met with some dissatisfaction, but on the whole seemed to be working out very well.

The notices were found scattered all over the camp grounds yesterday morning, but admission was charged nevertheless.

Special guards have been installed and the committee, composed of some of the best citizens of the county, propose to proceed as before.

Ask Teachers to Use Rod.

Chicago, Ill., August 29.—A plea for the return of the rod as a means of punishment in the school room by Dr. D. Stanley Hall, president of Clark University, Worcester, Mass., in an address to-day before the Cook County Teachers' Institute, precipitated a lively discussion among the Chicago educators.

"Pleasure is a wonderful thing," declared Dr. Hall, "but too much of it deteriorates life. A certain amount of pain is needed for human happiness, and that applies to the school-room as well as the rest of the world. That is one of the reasons why I think we should go to the rod for punishment."

"The rod supplies the best punishment to the unruly child, but if used the teacher should not wait until her anger has cooled."

UNCLE SAM RUNS SMALL COAL MINE

Vast Field Awaiting Future Development.

Billions of Dollars Worth of Lignite Could be Used For Nation.

Williston, N. D., Aug. 30.—While we are eagerly looking forward to the government development of Alaska's vast coal deposits, 'tis mighty interesting as well as surprising to take a look at the coal beds in our own Northwest which Uncle Sam has already started to develop.

This Government owned and operated a coal mine at Williston that is an eye opener. It reveals amazing possibilities for cheap fuel and power, and unexpected wealth for a great section that has yet thought little of mining and manufacture.

Uncle Sam is pecking at a nine-foot vein of lignite coal, and using it to run his irrigation project, incidentally selling surplus power to the city of Williston.

This particular mining property of Uncle Sam's is 1,000 acres in extent. The worked vein is the middle one of three veins, each from eight to ten feet thick, all easily workable. And in this 1,000 acres Uncle Sam figures that he has enough coal to supply all possible needs of his irrigation project for 1,000 years!

That's only the beginning of big figures. For Western North Dakota has 32,000 square miles of this same lignite coal. That's over 20,000,000 acres. Just compare that with the measly little patch that Uncle Sam says will supply him for 1,000 years.

And over the line, in Montana, there are 34,000 square miles more of the same deposits.

Prof. E. J. Babcock, dean of the North Dakota College of Mining Engineering, estimates that his State can produce 500,000,000,000 (five hundred billion dollars). And Montana could do as well.

Most of the coal is private ownership, but the Government still retains large holdings.

This vast wealth has hardly been touched. The section is sparsely settled with cattle and sheep ranchers and dry farmers. And the peculiar quality of the coal has made it difficult to handle.

Lignite is a brownish-black coal, lighter in weight than bituminous, with less fuel value. When mined it has, roughly, one-third water, one-third fixed carbon and one-third gas, not counting its 8 or 10 per cent of ashes. The water quickly evaporates, then the coal crumbles to slack. So it has been mined only for local consumption. The gas is usually lost in burning.

The problem here is, to get the total fuel value from the coal, and to make it available for shipment any distance.

Uncle Sam does the former very well. In his power plant boiler room he burns all of the gas (which others lose) by a scientific air-blast process. He produces power cheaply, as he uses his plant to fuller capacity.

Uncle Sam doesn't ship coal. But he transmits power. As a side issue, the plant is now furnishing 35,000 kilowatt hours of electricity a month to this city, at 4 1-2 cents per k. w. h. The city, retailing it at its old prices, is making a profit, and rates will go much lower.

Here's a striking example of the way city and Nation may co-operate to develop agriculture and industry. Uncle Sam might supply power to many communities.

But how shall these vast coal deposits be made available for distant fuel users?

Prof. Babcock has shown the way. He takes a ton of lignite and separates the gas from the coal, getting 11,000 cubic feet of excellent gas and half a ton of "briquets."

These briquets have almost the fuel value of anthracite coal, and are easier to ship and use.

The process increases the value of the raw coal and makes it cheaply marketable in a great region that imports most of its fuel. And yet not one private operator has seized the opportunity.

Many residents are hoping that Uncle Sam will do some more developing right here in the Northwest.

GIANT SKYSCRAPER IN CINCINNATI IS THE TALLEST OFFICE BUILDING WEST OF METROPOLIS OF NEW YORK

New Building Erected on Site of the So-Called Brighton Hill Mound, Supposed to Have Been the Work of Mound Builders of Early Centuries—The Union Central Life Insurance Company's Building is 535 Feet in Height, Located in the Center of the New Cincinnati Industrial District—Rivals European Cathedrals as a Work of Art and Engineering.

Cincinnati, Ohio, (Special)—The site of the city of Cincinnati was originally covered with an extensive system of elevations and mounds. Amongst the sites now occupied by the city was utilized by the mysterious builders, in the construction of embankments and mounds, built upon the most accurate geometrical principles, and exhibiting keen military foresight.

Recently every one of the leading chambers of mound builders was represented. The chief work was primarily a mound enclosure, known originally as the Brighton Hill Mound, upon which has now been erected the magnificent new building of the Union Central Life Insurance Co., which has become the center of the new Cincinnati about which one now hears so much.

Cincinnati, the city which for many years has proudly claimed the title of the "Queen City of the West," is now celebrating the completion of this new building, rising 535 feet from the basement to the top of the lantern, or 515 feet above the sidewalk of the street upon which it fronts. It is the most conspicuous landmark for miles around and is the first object seen by the traveler entering the city.

From whatever direction he comes he sees this white palace towering hundreds of feet above the other surrounding buildings, like an everlasting monument to the progressiveness of a great city. It is 34 stories in height, or including four stories below the sidewalk, 38 stories in all. To give an idea of the immensity of this building, compare it with other skyscrapers which are considered the largest in the world:

U. S. South Side Bldg., Seattle, 485 feet high
The Union Central Bldg., Cincinnati, 535 feet high Standard Trust Bldg., New York, 440 feet high River Bldg., New York, 433 feet high Metropolitan Tower, New York, 390 feet high Woodward Bldg., New York, 316 feet high

As a work of art the Union Central Building rivals the European cathedrals. Its beauty of line and symmetry of proportions combine with its brilliant coloring to produce a building which is a pleasure to the eye and one which commands universal admiration and approval. Credit for this is due to the President of the Company, James R. Clark, and to the Associated Architects, Mr. Cass Gilbert, of New York and Messrs. Garber and Woodward, of Cincinnati.

This building is a fitting successor to the other famous buildings which formerly occupied the same site, namely, the old postoffice of Continental architecture and the old Chamber of Commerce Building in the Renaissance style. The Union Central Building is a reproduction of the Italian Renaissance and yet it is well adapted to the needs of a modern office building.

The exterior of the building, up to the top of the fourth story, is of white Portland marble with heavy rustication. Above this, the surface is of terra cotta, the basic color being a dull brown, varying in tone.

panels of gold, which shine gloriously in the sun and can be seen for miles. The golden panels mark an entirely new use of terra cotta. It is a well-known fact that in a certain slant-light gold loses its luster. In the Union Central Building this difficulty is overcome by an undulating surface; the face of every gold terra cotta tile is irregular, so that some part of it, no matter from what direction the light comes, will always shine brilliantly.

Terra cotta is absolutely fireproof and is permanently durable. With the exception of hard burnt brick, terra cotta is less affected by fire than any other material. Another property of glazed terra cotta is that the hard surface is impervious. All that a glazed terra cotta surface needs to remove any accumulation of soap or dirt is a simple application of soap and water.

The framework of the building consists of structural steel columns, girders and beams. Special precautions were taken to make it stable, and the steel was designed to resist the strongest wind pressure. The foundations consist of a steel grillage and cantilevers, thoroughly imbedded in concrete, and resting upon a stratum of hard compact gravel. Thorough tests were made of the soil to insure a stable foundation.

The building contains twelve electric traction elevators which travel 500 feet a minute, and are in batteries of six, facing each other, a very convenient arrangement. They contain every modern, automatic safety device and each elevator is connected by tele phone with the engine room and with the elevator starter.

One of the most interesting points in connection with the building is the fireproofing precautions. Not only is the frame of the building steel and the exterior surfaces stone and terra cotta but the floors are concrete, all the doors are metal, the window casings and frames metal, the trim metal—in fact there is no exposed wood in the building. The doors are of hollow steel, beautifully finished in exact imitation of mahogany. In a vapor-retarding enamel that is baked on at a high temperature. The windows are copper covered, over a wood core, the latest type of fireproof construction. The trim, that is the base rail, chair and picture moldings, is of hollow steel and it is interesting to note that more than eighteen miles of this material have been used in the building.

Additional precautions against fire have been taken, notwithstanding the fact that the building is built of fire proof materials. There are two stair ways from the roof to the street level entirely separated from the corridor and offices, in different sections of the building, accessible to all, self-enclosed in smoke-proof and fireproof walls with metal floors.

The elevator shafts are self-enclosed, in fireproof partitions, with wire glass doors. All of the windows of the building which are closely exposed toward adjoining buildings are filled with wire glass which is fire proof.

The Union Central Building is not only fireproof in construction, but in the company's offices it is equipped throughout with steel cabinets, filing cases and document files, which preclude the danger of interior fire. In this respect it is one of the most modern buildings in the United States. The sub-basement is furnished with over 15,000 steel document files, for the safe storage of the valuable insurance records.

Approaching the main entrance which is on a level with Fourth street, we pass through the bronze doors and enter the main corridor. This space one half traverses the entire length of the building. On entering this magnificent corridor, one is enchanted with the grandeur of the decorated golden ceiling, hand-carved imported Spanish marble columns and wall-scaping, and the bronze frames and doors of the elevators. Just beyond the elevators is the stairway which leads to the Chamber of Commerce. This stairway is hand-carved imported Spanish marble, highly decorated, and is considered to be the finest stairway in America.

Ascending this magnificent stairway we approach the Chamber of Commerce and Merchants' Exchange on the second floor. The south end of this is used as an immense trading hall extending to the ceiling of the third floor. This assembly hall is 500 feet long, with highly decorated ceiling and imported Spanish marble wall-scaping. The room, which is in the western side of the hall, is also highly decorated Spanish marble and a thing of beauty.

A room has been set aside for the Weather Bureau, in which is placed a sub-station for the special use of the Chamber of Commerce and the occupants of this building. The sub-station is an innovation and is equipped with the latest and most up-to-date instruments, giving momentary reports of the weather from the roof of the building to the Chamber floor.

On the third floor will be a balcony from which visitors may view the Chamber while in session. The remainder of the space on the second and third floors is used for Produce Exchange, directors' rooms, library, offices and committee rooms.

The executive staff of the Union Central Life Insurance Company, with the clerical forces of the various departments occupy the eleventh to eighteenth floors, inclusive, as well as use the safety vaults in the sub-basement. The President's office, Board of Directors' and Executive Committee rooms are upon the fifteenth floor. In connection with the Medical Department of the company is an emergency hospital for the comfort and convenience of all the tenants of the building.

The building is equipped with a refrigerating plant for the cooling of water for drinking purposes, with ice water distributed through sanitary drinking fountains to different floors from the basement to the twenty-ninth floor. The plumbing is somewhat unique, as the water is delivered into tanks in the basement and pumped to a large distributing tank on the top floor, near the tower.

The building is equipped with an elaborate vacuum cleaning system and a ventilating system which furnishes pure and tempered air to the Chamber of Commerce rooms, boiler and engine rooms, sub-basement, vaults, etc. There are 12,000 electric lights in the building. In the sub-basement there are four 250-horse-power tube boilers, two 500-horse-power compound engines, one 250-horse-power engine, two 300 and one 150 k. w. generators. This comprises the power plant of this immense building.

In the construction of the building, over 8,614 tons of structural iron were used. The building has 227,976 square feet of rental space, and there are exactly 5,175,000 cubic feet within the building. All of the constructing work was done by union men.

The Union Central Life Insurance Company, the owner of the building, was established in Cincinnati forty-six years ago.

"Were all medicines as meritorious as Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy the world would be much better off and the percentage of suffering greatly decreased," writes Lindsay Scott, of Temple, Ind. For sale by all dealers.

CARE FOR STACKED ALFALFA

Best Way to Cure Hay is to Rake it Into Small Winrows and Let the Crop Dry Out Slowly.

Sometimes weather conditions make it almost impossible to put alfalfa hay in the stack in good condition, and heating and burning results. A. H. Leidligh, assistant professor of crops at the Kansas Agricultural college, says a comparison will show why the water does not readily cure out of the stems. If a tree is cut down on a cool, cloudy day, said Professor Leidligh, the leaves remain green and fresh for some time. They take water from the trunk and pass it off into the atmosphere. If the weather is reasonably cool for a few days, the water will all be taken out of the tree.

Now, if the tree is cut down on a hot, sultry day the leaves will dry up and fall off. The water is still in the trunk of the tree, and there is no way for it to get out quickly. It is the same with alfalfa.

When it is impossible to wring water out of the hay, says Professor Leidligh, it is dry enough to stack. The best way to cure hay is to rake it into small winrows and let it dry out slowly. If the ground is damp, or if the air is very moist, the winrows must be turned frequently to expose all the hay to the sun.

Hay often heats in the stack because it is rained on, or because it absorbs moisture from the ground. Not less than $5 to $10 worth of hay is spoiled on the top and bottom of a 25-foot stack of alfalfa, put up in the usual way. This loss may be avoided by stacking on a foundation of poles, or under sheds. The money saved on a few stacks will pay for the shed.

Opinions differ on just how much the feeding value of alfalfa is affected by heating. Some argue that while it lowers the feeding value, it improves the taste. Cattle usually eat brown and black alfalfa with more relish than they do the bright green hay.

Why Stop So Soon.

In a neighboring county in Western Kentucky a newspaper printed the following letter from a man who was nominated for the state senate it appears after the election, be it added, to the credit of the voters in that district:

"Now I will bes for the repelling the Rhode Law and the Fish Law the Drinking Cup Law and the Burial Certificate Law. I think it a Dirty Shame for Such Laws to be On Our Statute Books. I Will Bee for What I believe to be the best Intrust of the People."

The writer, also doubtless stands for the repeal of the spelling book, a statue abolishing the grammar, the obliteration of all educational requirements for school teachers and the elimination of any punishment for assassination of the King's English.

Almost Lost His Life.

S. A. Stid, of Mason, Mich., will never forget his terrible exposure to a merciless storm. "It gave me a dreadful cold," he writes, "that caused severe pains in my chest, so it was hard for me to breathe. A neighbor gave me several doses of Dr. King's New Discovery which brought great relief. The doctor said I was on the verge of pneumonia, but to continue with the Discovery. I did so and two bottles completely cured me." Use only this quick, safe, reliable medicine for coughs, colds, or any throat or lung trouble. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free. WORK OF CYCLONE

Acts as Matchmaker and Reunites Lovers After Many Years of Misunderstanding.

By JOHN ALWAYNE.

"Why don't you an' the Widow Wilson git hitched?" his cronies would ask of William Yoakum at the village store. And Yoakum, with a sudden flash of anger in his blue eyes, would answer:

"I don't go courtin' no women. When they want me let 'em send for me."

All of which would duly find its way to the Widow Wilson's ears through the wives of the various auditors of Yoakum's ultimatum. Nevertheless it did seem strange that two old friends should live in chilly isolation upon neighboring ranches. True the ranches were quarter sections, and at least half a mile lay between the two houses. But they were the nearest neighbors of one another, and they had known each other since childhood. Yoakum was a man of fifty, and the widow might have been forty-five—though she did not look anywhere near it.

There were few residents of the little Kansas settlement who remembered the time when it had been a frontier outpost. But everybody knew that old man Farley and old man Yoakum had migrated together and fought Indians together. The children had grown up together and everybody had expected them to get married. Then Wilson had come along and snatched Adeline Farley out of Yoakum's hand—almost literally, for the bans had been announced when the startling news came from Kansas City that the pair were man and wife. Old Farley forgave his daughter and took her home when Wilson deserted his young bride; but Yoakum never got over it. He went to California and was not heard of for five and twenty years. Then he drifted back to take up land in the town of his birth, to find all his old friends scattered or dead, and Adeline Wilson, a widow, farming her father's land.

Yoakum had never married. Gossips averred that he and the widow would soon come together, even though a bitter enmity seemed to rage between them. But Yoakum was proud as well as shy. Thus, when he was twitted, he returned the answer given above.

"It All Seems Like a Dream."

"I should think, Adeline, that a comparatively young woman like you would think of marrying again," her friends would say, thinking of her neighbor.

"If it's Will Yoakum you're thinking of," Mrs. Wilson answered, "you're all dead wrong. When a man wants to come courtin' me, let him come and ask me. I don't go out of the way to invite any man into my home."

"I'll never enter her home until she asks me," was Yoakum's answer, and the two stood pat. Inwardly both regretted the position they had taken. Each had secret romantic remembrances of that period when they were sweethearts, but the widow's will was as inflexible as his.

They were not enemies; when they met they would bow and sometimes speak, but their spoken words acted as a barrier between them. Thus matters ran along for a year after Yoakum's return.

March came, snowy and blustering. The winds were incessant. Yoakum was harnessing his horse for the first plowing one day when he felt a violent blow on the back of the head. He turned to defend himself, but everything swam before his eyes, and, with the sense of being carried away on a swift river, he lapsed into unconsciousness.

He opened his eyes ages later, as it seemed, and the first thing they lit upon was the Widow Wilson.

He was lying in bed in a darkened room, and she sat by his side. Her eyes were red from crying. Yoakum endeavored to sit up.

"Hush!" she said, gently pressing him backward. "You have been very ill. You must lie still."

The widow, in his house! Yoakum had often pictured the possibility of such an occurrence, but now, to his surprise, his sensation was one of shame. He looked at her as well as he could in the obscurity of the room.

Except that she was more matronly and that threads of gray showed at her temples, she might have been the same Adeline Farley, and he might have parted from her a few minutes before.

"Adeline," he said timidly, "it all seems like a dream to me."

Adeline was silent, but he could see that she, too, was moved.

"It seems as though we hadn't been parted these five and twenty years, Adeline," he resumed. "Do you remember when we went down to the stream that night I asked you, and found a bunch of wild myrtle growing, and how I put it in your hair?"

"And then you told me you loved me," said Adeline.

"And I've loved you ever since," Adeline, he continued, taking her hand. Adeline Wilson made no resistance, but her eyes were still downcast.

"Why did you marry Wilson, dear?" asked the man.

For the first time she raised her eyes. "I guess because I was a fool, Will," she answered.

"And you couldn't manage to care for me just the least bit, could you, Addie?" he asked.

The widow was tracing out the pattern upon the counterpane. "Why wouldn't you come to see me?" she asked suddenly.

"I guess for the same reason that you married Wilson," he answered. "I'm stubborn, as you are. But I'm sorry. And when I think that it was you who gave in and came to me, it just makes me feel cheap. Did they get the robbers?"

"Robbers? What robbers?" asked Adeline, looking at him curiously.

"The men who struck me down. Slick fellows they must have been, too. There was a I, sitting beside my plow in broad daylight when they got me and I never so much as saw or heard them."

"Where do you think you are, Will?" inquired the Widow Wilson.

"Why, at home, of course," he answered. "Where else should I be? But I see you've changed the furniture round, haven't you?"

The Widow Wilson was laughing and crying hysterically. Yoakum looked at her in wonder.

"Don't you know that when our fathers built their homes they made them both the same and got the same kind of furniture?" she asked when she had recovered her self-possession.

"You mean—that I'm in your house, Addie?" he cried. "Who brought me here?"

"You brought yourself, my dear, yesterday morning. There weren't any robbers, Will, it was a cyclone. Picked you up from your plow and carried you nicely through the air and plunked you down beside me on a bed of hay I'd pulled down for Bessie and her calf. If that plow hadn't toppled over on your head—"

But the Widow Wilson did not have a chance to finish just then for William Yoakum had caught her in his arms with surprising strength for a sick man to show; and you can't talk when you are being kissed, they say.

UNMOVED BY GOOD FORTUNE

John McCluskey Evidently Possessed of All the Well-Known Calmness of the Scotch Nature.

It was said of John McCluskey when he visited the states that he was the calmest man in the world. Throughout his sixty years he had been a farm laborer in Scotland. Some months previously his brother James died and left a fortune of several hundred thousand dollars to the brother he had not seen since they bade each other good-by in the heather forty years before.

A lawyer was appointed the administrator. It was his duty to find the lucky brother.

"He was slicing turnips for the sheep on his employer's farm, up among the mist-clad hills of Scotland," said the man of law, "when I found him. I had traced his life from the old farm on which he was born step by step through the forty years of ill-paid and often most unpleasant labor, before I found him. It was not difficult, for he had held but few positions in all those years. Everyone in the countryside knew him."

"Are you John McCluskey?" I asked.

"I am," said he, without taking his eyes from the turnips and the knife.

"Your brother James is dead in New York," said I.

"Aweel, aweel, all men must e'en die," he said, slicing away.

"He left you a good fortune," said I. "I want you to come to the house with me, so that I can establish your identity and arrange for you to enter into possession of the estate."

"I'll talk to ye at sax o'clock, young man," said he. "I'll be busy till then. The fortune will keep, but the turnips will not."

Quite Correct.

During the army maneuvers two officers of the Royal artillery were disputing about the classification of a tree. One said it was a birch tree, and the other an oak tree. They could not agree, so they called a gunner who was sitting near by and asked him if he could tell them what kind of tree it was.

The gunner looked up and down the tree, walked all round it, drew his sword, and began cutting it. The officers asked him what he meant by this behaviour, when he looked up at them and answered:

"I am trying to discover what kind of tree it is."

Inspecting the gash he had made, with the air of a sage the gunner at length delivered his long-expected verdict:

"It's a wooden one, sirs!"

NOT PEPPERMINT BUT STRONG

Illiterate Man Was Not to Be Convinced That He Had Really Smelt Nothing.

At a certain northern Chautauqua gathering last summer a lecturer, at the opening of his address, came to the front of the platform and took a small vial from his pocket.

"My friends," he said, "before I begin my address, I wish to test the ventilation of this auditorium. I am going to pour out this oil of peppermint. When the odor reaches you, raise your hands, so that I may see how rapidly it travels."

He emptied the vial, and almost instantly several hands on the front benches went up; then farther back the hands began to go up by the dozens, until at last the people in the last seats caught the odor, and raised their hands.

The lecturer thanked his auditors, and went on with his address. When he had almost finished, and was speaking of the effect of the imagination on our senses, he paused, and said with a smile that it was only clear water he had poured out of his vial.

The audience had been caught so neatly that even those who had held up their hands joined in the laugh. But one illiterate fellow, whose hand had gone up more promptly and emphatically than any other, did not quite understand.

"What they laughin' at?" he asked, audibly, of the man sitting beside him.

"Why," explained the man, "you did not smell peppermint at all; it was only imagination."

"Well," said the other, "I knowed it was somethin' that smelled mighty strong."—Youth's Companion.

LITTLE KNOWN OF HEREDITY

Much Talk on the Subject, But World Still Awaits a Satisfactory Explanation.

There are few subjects on which so much "scientific" nonsense is talked and written as on heredity. Not very much is known of it as regards plants, less of animals, and almost nothing as regards humanity, writes H. Fielding-Hall in the Atlantic. To read books on heredity, especially those of the Eugenic society, is to read a mass of suppositions and hazardous inductions where most of the facts are negative, and only the exceptions are positive. The very meaning of "hereditary" is not understood. If any quality is truly hereditary, then it is always hereditary. It never occurs except as the results of heredity, and it is constant, that is to say, it invariably follows. But there is no quality of which this can be said. That genius is not hereditary is known. Even talent is not. Nor is any aptitude. A lawyer's son more often wants to be a soldier or an artist than a lawyer, notwithstanding the environment, and it is so with most professions. The exceptions seem to be due to training and influence, not to any hereditary transmission. A superficial likeness to parents seems hereditary, but that is all that we can assert, and that outward likeness by no means infers an inward likeness. There is nothing to attribute to heredity what is due to training or want of training. It excuses supineness in governments and professions.

Without Food Twenty-eight Days.

A remarkable feat of involuntary fasting was performed 12 years ago by a corporal in a regiment of French colonial infantry. On his way to work one morning a man heard cries proceeding from a disused mine, near Brest. At the bottom of an excavation nearly 100 feet deep Corporal Andre Desrats was found in so weak a condition that he could hardly articulate a word. When he recovered his rescuers learned that, after accidentally falling into the mine, Desrats had been imprisoned for twenty-eight days without anything to eat or drink. But a pig can beat a man. Dr. W. B. Carpenter in his Manual of Physiology records that a pig weighing 160 pounds was entombed by the fall of a portion of the chalk cliffs at Dover. It was dug out 160 days later, and found to be still alive, but reduced in weight to 40 pounds.

Of Course.

A New York dramatic writer tells of an actress of great popularity who is just beginning to be obsessed with the notion that the public holds her to be older than she really is.

The writer was assigned to interview this player. He wished to obtain her views with reference to the state of the drama, a topic whereon the actress did not seem particularly anxious to decant.

"It does not seem to me," gently suggested the interviewer, with a smile, "that I am really ascertaining your opinion. You ought to be frank, since your eyes are gray and—"

"Prematurely so, my dear boy, prematurely so," the actress hastened to assure him.—Judge.

Walking at Billiards.

"I figure out," said one of the billiard experts playing in the championship games, "that I walk three miles when I play 400 points. Of course, sometimes I do less than that, provided my average runs by nursing are larger. When I can keep the balls closely together for a good run, that lessens the distance I have to walk."

This cue artist said he once made 100 points and did not circle the table half a dozen times. More amazing still was the assertion that he had seen the late Jacob Schaefer run 150 points without going even once entirely around the table.

Out in California and Colorado the autumnal rains are now attempting to grow whiskers as a further mark of their reaching the heights (?) of equal rights with men.

In advocacy of the life tenure for judges before the American bar association, Ex-President Taft is reported to have said "that only by this means could the judiciary be hedged around with immunity from the temporary majority in the electorate and from the influence of a partisan executive or legislature." This is just what the people are complaining about. The present Federal judiciary is made up largely with men who have previously been the servants of great corporations and who are more or less influenced by this service and the "poor devil" who attempts to get justice from one of these "divine" judges, so hedged

Owing to the failure of the tobacco crop in Ohio county this year,
it would be a good thing to inaugurate the "no tobacco" campaign. Almost all our people agree that it would be far better to grow some other product, but they have never been able to let go the weed. The State of Kentucky would be far better off financially and morally if we had never grown a pound of tobacco.
Our soil has been impoverished without commensurate return. Kentucky would be a garden spot if the soil shipped away in the shape of tobacco could be in place and in grasses and products necessary to human life, now bringing better prices than ever and the growing of these crops would not keep the boys away from school half the year. Even at this late day let's cut out tobacco.

Kentucky is far behind in the matters pertaining to education, when compared with many of the states of the west. Instead of going backward, our rate of school per capita should be increasing. Our teachers are poorly paid, and we can scarcely expect first class work from an underpaid body of men and women. It will be remembered that Governor Beckham in his campaign against Gov. McCreary for the United States Senatorship a few years ago charged that under the former administration of Mc-Creary taxes had been increased and the school per capita lowered. Under his present administration the school per capita has been reduced and all hands are agreed that taxes must be increased. Thus history is repeating itself, and Gov. Beckham's statements are being vindicated. Still Gov. Mc-Creary is asking the Democrats of the State to elect him "just one more time."

Agricultural Extension. COVER CROPS.

Kentucky is a land largely made up of rolling, hilly, or even mountainous areas with most of its soil of a clay formation. These two conditions present a most favorable combination for washing and in nearly every part of the state one becomes impressed with the terrible damage done annually by the gullying of sloping areas caused by heavy rains. Corn is Kentucky's principal crop, especially from the standpoint of area planted, and this crop after the thorough loosening of the soil from cultivation during the summer leaves the ground in perfect condition for washing and subsequent gullying. The most effective way of preventing this great damage to our farms is by never leaving these cultivated areas open to the heavy rains of fall and winter, this being prevented by providing some growing crop to cover the ground during these seasons.

The plant most in favor as a cover crop in this state is rye. This is because of the relative cheapness of seed, the lateness at which rye can be sown, the comparative certainty of getting a stand, its degree of immunity to winter freezing, and the pasture which the crop furnishes before plowing under preparatory to the next year's crop.

Rye as a cover may be sown in the corn field any time from September fifteenth to October fifteenth, the earlier seeding often furnishing good late fall and winter pasture. It would be an excellent practice if each farmer would annually sow enough rye as a regular crop to provide sufficient seed for planting all areas on the farm which otherwise would be left naked during the winter.

Doubtless the only shortcoming of rye as a cover crop is that it does not feed upon nitrogen taken directly from the air and hence adds more of this valuable element of plant food to the soil. We must look to the so-called leguminous plants to perform this function. Hairy, or winter vetch perhaps best supplements this need.

and can be successfully grown with rye by reducing the quantity of rye seed and sowing during September, preferably not later than the fifteenth of that month. Rye and vetch after mixing can be sown from the ground drill, in which case from two pecks of rye and about one pound of vetch per acre should be used.

Winter vetch is a stem, leafy plant, resembling those of the ape, and a blue clustering bosom which appears shortly before the ripening of the rye. Its remaining nature makes the rye of great benefit in its support for with its tendrils the vetch climbs nearly to the full height of the rye. The feeding value of vetch is excellent and more Kentucky farmers should test its merit
as a cover crop, with rye.

Youths Punishment is Navy Er- listment.

Washington, Sept. 2.—Navy Department officials are greatly incensed
over the action of a Maryland State Attorney and Deputy Sheriffs in allowing a youth convicted of theft to escape punishment by enlisting in the Navy. Secretary Daniels today addressed a letter to Gov. Goldsborough denouncing the action of the State officers, and informing the Governor that the navy no longer is a Botany Bay for the punishment of culprits.

Referring to the high standard of character prevailing in the enlisted personnel, the Secretary said it would be necessary to discharge the man in question, and asked whether the Maryland authorities wanted him turned over to them. According to the reports to the department, the youth enlisted in Baltimore recently, after a Deputy Sheriff had accompanied him to the recruiting station and posed as his mother's friend.
Names were withheld by the department.

MANY FAIL IN PARIS CAREERS

Lonely American Girls Die In Metropolis.

Work, Worry and Longing For Companionship Cause of Self-Destruction.

Paris, Aug. 30.—Edward Jeannemon is a smiling little Frenchman and an undertaker. He it is who buries American girls in Paris after they've killed themselves.

"I don't know why they end their lives," he told them with a shrug. "I wonder many times, but I do not know. Maybe it is because they become so lonesome. But I have buried many, many of them."

"How many?"
"Well, for thirty-five years my two uncles buried most of the Americans who died in Paris, and I was with them for many years. Now I have their business. But I have never counted."

"Sometimes I have had chances to talk to the girls in the hospitals, for I am the sexton of the American church, but they never tell why they used poison, or gas, or bullets."

"There was the American girl who died in Paris, July 3. Her name was Agnes Macduff, and when I heard that she was in the hospital I went to see her. It was June 17 that she took the poison in her room at a good hotel."

"At the hospital, after a few days,
she said to me, 'Oh, I'm so glad that I will get well. I was so lonely I wanted to die. But now I'm better.
Will you take some of my money and buy me a ticket for America? I'm going to go home again.' She talked all the time as if she thought she would get well. She had plenty of money and she was beautiful and full of smiles. But she got worse and died."

"We didn't send her body home, but buried it here in Paris. She'll sleep just as well as in America. I think."

"It is sad, too, is it not? They come here to do some big things—to be great painters or great musicians—and then the loneliness drives them to death."

"Some of them are beautiful, I think the most beautiful woman I ever saw was an American girl whose body lay on a table in my place. She was a wonderful singer, but one night she dressed herself beautifully and gave a party to some friends.
Then, as soon as they had gone, she shot herself. Everybody said she was lonely."

"And then there was a girl—oh, she was a fine girl, beautiful—who played the piano and studied music under a great artist. One night she sent a servant to buy her a big measure of ice cream and while she ate the ice cream alone—for she had no friends in Paris—she let the gas fill the room and kill her."

"Do you suppose she made believe,
as she died, that she was having a little party with the ones she loved at home?"

And the little undertaker told me of more cases of bullets, gas and poison; of fine, brainy American girls "killed by loneliness" in busy, gay, beautiful Paris, the center of the world's art.

"How old are most of the girls who have killed themselves in Paris?"
I asked.

"It is odd, but they are all between 25 and 30," he said. "Isn't that just about the time in life when a man or woman realizes whether the path they have chosen is the right one or not?"

The tragedies of "careers"
Most of the American girls the little undertaker has buried in Paris are, I think, girls who have chosen
"careers" and then, at the last,
when it has seemed to them too late,
have discovered that there are more wonderful things in life for women than making fine music or painting splendid pictures.

it has effected. For sale by all deal-

PREMIER OF JAPAN

DOESN'T USE WINE

But [It Is With Tea Instead of Grape Juice That He Refreshes Himself.

Japan's prime minister, Count Yamamoto, is a total abstainer from the use of spirituous liquors, but he prefers his native tea to grape juice. In his abstemiousness he is also like Secretary of State Bryan in the fact that he does not smoke, believing all indulgence in tobacco bad for his health.

Count Yamamoto is an early riser.
At 5 o'clock precisely every morning
he is seen, in plain Japanese garb, taking a walk in the neighborhood of his residence in Tokio. Upon his return he reads his papers with extraordinary attention from heavy editorials down to minor city events.
With Countess Yamamoto he has a plain breakfast, consisting of milk, eggs and rice. After his day's work, while his wife prepares his tea.

Although an admirer, the premier wears a frock coat. Punctually at 8
he leaves his home in an automobile, and in fifteen minutes he arrives at the cabinet offices, which are inside the palace compound. There he grimly goes through piles of state documents until noon he takes his European luncheon, which invariably drives
the severity from his countenance, and he is then ready for amiable conferences with his secretaries.

The premier shuns social engagements and late hours. At 4 p. m. he leaves his office and goes straight to his home. After a bath and a stroll in his garden he partakes of a hearty Japanese dinner, for he is a healthy, stout old sailor with a real appetite. He wears a mustache and beard, now almost gray, but his eyes, bright and penetrating, testifying to the power and strength within. At the same time he has a kind heart. His domestic characterizes him as an amiable and sympathetic master.

If you knew of the real value of Chamberlain's Liniment for lame back, soreness of the muscles, sprains and rheumatic pains, you would never wish to be without it. For sale by all dealers.

Coffins and Cradles.

England is apparently fast coming to rival France as a nation where the rule is "more coffins than cradles." Recent investigation discovered the fact that the average number of offspring of an English army officer is two, which is just half the number necessary to carry on the race. Births among professional men and in society circles are even lower.

To encourage a great birth rate,
reformers in certain parts of England have tried the experiment of giving a bonus of $25 to $50 for every child of one year. This resulted in a considerable increase in births. Now the granting of bonuses to mothers throughout the British Empire is urged as the only means of keeping up the birth rate.

The relation between births and wages cannot be overlooked. But it is not to be bridged over by a bonus of $25 or so. A far more effective way to encourage the raising of families is to make employment steadier.

Where the nature of the industry is not stable, agencies should be provided which would enable the man laid off in one industry to obtain another job some place else without too great a loss of time and earnings.
When men working for wages find it easier to provide for children, when the dread out of work ceases to haunt them, the birth rate is sure to go up.—Chicago Tribune.

Baseball Dope.

Beech Creek, a swift aggregation of ball players, played against Hartford here Saturday afternoon, defeating Hartford, score 2 to 5. The Hartford battery consisted of Rickard and McDougal and Brown, and Beech Creek had Mack Brown and Cody on the points. On account of Withrow, on second for Hartford, letting an apparently easy grounder go through him the visitors took three runs, and caused a panic in the Hartford camp. The game opened by Mr. R. T. Collins calling the game, but it had not progressed very far, until the visitors objected to him, and Mr. Ray Addington called the remainder of the game.

Hartford will pay Livermore here Saturday afternoon.

Beech Creek defeated Taylor Mines at the latter place Sunday by the score of 17 to 4, and at Central City Monday 14 to 6.

19 TEACHERS LOSE RIGHTS TO TEACH

Certificates are Revoked For Failure to Attend Institute.

Frankfort, Ky., Sept. 1.—Mrs. Nannie Fulkner, of Lexington, Superintendent of the Fayette County schools, today revoked the certificates held by nineteen teachers of that county.

In each case the certificates were revoked because the teachers had not complied with the statute requiring them to attend the county teachers' institutes. When the fact that they had failed to attend the County Teachers' Institute of Fayette County last October was brought to the attention of Mrs. Faulkner, three was but one course she could pursue, and that was to revoke their certificates.

The statute says that the certificates of any teacher failing or refusing to attend the county teachers' institutes shall be revoked, the word shall being construed as mandatory and not directory.

The unlucky teachers are Nannie Tracy, Marie C. Phillips, Lena Johnson, Mrs. H. C. Akers, Emma Johnson, Elizabeth Bush, Elizabeth Cloud, Ida K. Smith, Rhoda V. Glass, Ella G. Philpotts, Anna Snowden, Mary E. Fiddler, Mary Stenor, James O. Donaldson, Florida Gibson, Emma Moore, Mabel Pollitt, Elizabeth Garison and Virginia C. Betts.

The certificates must be revoked, but the teachers have the right to take an appeal to the State Superintendent of Public Instruction of the State School Board. They must show cause why they did not attend the institutes. They must have been ill or some other equally as good reason or their certificates will stand revoked.

NINA AND THE CAT

Being Black the Feline Should Have Brought Bad Luck, but Didn't.

By WALTER JOSEPH DELANEY.

Croft Waddington voted it a blessed chance that impelled him to spoil a good suit of clothes in a chilling bath and place himself under a doctor's care for a week. It was all for a cat, a skinny, homeless, ill-natured black cat, only—the feline had leaped into disaster from the soft graceful arms of the most radiant young girl Croft had ever seen.

He had been only a week at Durham and was a stranger there. He had worked too hard for five years for a great oil concern in the city and had broken down. Valued and popular, the giant monopoly had given him two months' salary in advance and a liberal bonus and had told him to get out into the country and build up.

It was dull at the dead little town he had come to. At the end of even a week, however, fresh air, brisk walks, real cream and home cooking had already begun to restore color to the cheeks and brightness to the eye of the invalid. Else he would not have been able to perform an extremely heroic act, at least manly and courageous in the eyes of pretty winsome Nina Vincent.

He had come upon her midway on a rustic bridge crossing a narrow but deep stream. At a glance Croft saw that she was in direful distress. She had been carrying half covered up in a light wrap the black cat in question. It had given a sudden leap for freedom. The animal missed the rail aimed for, and with a resounding yowl and a splash struck the water and disappeared under it.

There was a vivid scream from the young lady. To Croft it sounded quite heartrending. A true Knight Fidelis, he acted on the spur of the moment. The cat did not seem to have the strength to struggle. It had come to the surface twice. Croft leaped lightly ly over the rail. There was a second splash. Nina screamed again.

Leaped Lightly Over the Rail.

"With apologies from both," observed Croft with a faint smile as he held the wilted and bedraggled feline towards her.

"Oh, why did you?" cried Nina, her eyes sparkling, her lips distended, her hand resting gratefully on his arm, dripping as it was—"but oh! how grand!"

"It was worth it—for the cat," declared Croft as Nina caressed the rescued animal. She flushed and tried to change the direct theme.

"You know I teach music in the village," she went on in her artless way. Croft did not know it, but he was glad to know all about herself she would tell. "Some boys were tormenting the poor miserable creature. Poor thing!"

Probably hungry, homeless. Oh, you poor friendless dear," and Nina fondly placed her cheek against the shivering feline with a tenderness that made Croft thrill with envy. "But how heedless I am!" she interrupted herself with a dismayed glance at her dripping knight errant—"you are wet."

"Slightly," bowed Croft, trying to look the martyr and wishing he was a kitten.

"I would ask you to the cottage," proceeded Nina in deep embarrassment, "but you must be dried."

"The sun will do that," insisted Croft gaily. "The cottage—your home, I presume? And in this lovely spot? I should like to see it," and thus, untempted as he was, the venturesome Croft glided along by the side of the dainty little miss, an insistent and admiring cavalier, and—caught the cold of his life.

He went to sleep that night dreaming of a stroll to that same woodland cottage. He awoke with a sore throat and a fever and a doctor sent for. More than once, after a day or two when he was over the crisis, he heard a gentle feminine voice speak in the outer apartment. His landlady told him it was Miss Vincent.

Then there was a beautiful bouquet of wild flowers brought to him each day. One morning a card photograph was left for him. It pictured a cat, the cat, looking quite respectable with a charming cherry riband about its neck.

That same day Croft was able to be up and about. The next he essayed one of his customary walks—of course towards the woodland cottages. He passed by it several times. It belonged to Miss Nesbit, the aunt of Nina. An up hill down dale tract of arable land went with it, the sole possession of the maiden lady in question. Croft ventured to intrude upon the general domain. Then he caught sight of the flutter of a dress in among a nest of shrubbery. It acted like a magnet. He climbed a fence and reached a spot where the object of his interest sat upon a fallen tree.

Nina was crying. It seemed his fate to come across her always in some girlish ingenuous pose. She sprang to her feet and impulsively extended her hand, the tears chased away by genuine pleasure over his convalescence. She was still so grateful for his kindness! She had chided herself as the cause of his illness—a rush of words, to check herself with a conscious blush in the midst of telling how he had not left her thoughts.

"Hence these tears?" he intimated smilingly.

"Oh, dear, no!" she disclaimed—"it is Cleo."

"Cleo?" he repeated ignorantly.

"Cleopatra, the black cat."

"Ah, I understand now," bowed Croft. "In trouble again?"

"In dreadful trouble," declared Nina, and the corners of her pretty mouth drew down dismally. "From the first aunt has rebelled—says a black cat brings bad luck that we have enough mouths to feed. I think she drove it away purposely. I know she scared poor Cleopatra."

"Who has gone back to be pelted again by the street gamins I suppose?" inferred Croft.

"Oh, dear, no. I have traced Cleopatra to a burrow over near the creek, but I can't coax her out."

"Let me help you."

Behold the convalescent, lively as a cricket, one-half an hour later bending over a rock strewn spot with a match and looking down a cavernous hole where two bright eyes glowed.

"I've got her," he announced, and drew out the truant. As Croft did so he dropped the lighted match into a little pool at one side. There was a flash.

"Oili!" he said, in some surprise. "Quite a find. Miss Vincent, I wish to investigate this."

One week later Miss Clarinda Nesbit walked into town to sign over the old farm for a royal sum to the great oil monopoly.

She carried in her arms, tenderly cherished, the former token of misfortune, of ill luck, now transformed to her glorified vision into a veritable mascot—Cleopatra.

And in her wake like cooling lovers trailed Croft and Nina. She wore an engagement ring, and he the cherry riband stolen from Cleopatra through whom golden fortune and happiness had come.

STILL MANY USERS OF SNUFF

Manufacturer Corrects Impression That Custom is Dying Out—Some Incredibly Expensive Grades.

A millionaire snuff manufacturer sat in his $6,000 French car watching the bathers.

"And so," he laughed, "you think snuff-taking is dying out, eh? You think the snuffmaker's trade is extinct, like that of the armorer? Well, you're off—off, off."

"Snuff-taking increases—not, I admit, in Fifth avenue or Rittenhouse square. But it increases. I sell more snuff today than I ever did. The Chinese, especially since the abolition of opium smoking among them, have taken up snuff."

"But the rich Chinese, the mandarins, don't get their snuff from me. No, they get it from Portugal, from families owning secret, old-time recipes, who charge as much for the exquisite melanges as $300 and $500 a pound."

"This snuff the Chinaman ages like wine. He carries it about with him in priceless bottles of jade, of agate and rock crystal. He hands it about only at state banquets."

"This Portugal snuff, at $300 a pound, is the best. The worst is the snuff of Symrna, which is made of 25 per cent. walnut sawdust, 10 per cent. brown earth, 5 per cent. oxide of lead and 60 per cent. cigar stumps."

Not Far From The Truth.

Mrs. Knoall was greatly puzzled—and not without reason. The fact is, she happened to meet Mr. Newlywed one morning as he was rushing to catch his train, and ventured, with her usual solicitude for other folks' affairs, to hope that Mrs. Newlywed wasn't having trouble with her servants.

"Oh, no!" said Mr. Newlywed. "We've got three!"

Then he dashed off, leaving Mrs. Knoall gasping. Three servants, indeed! Why, it was common knowledge in Suburbville that the Newlyweds were anything but rich. How on earth, then, could they afford to keep three servants? Mrs. Knoall felt forced to call on the bride that afternoon to make investigations.

On his return home in the evening Mr. Newlywed was greeted with this question:

"John, whatever made you tell Mrs. Knoall this morning that we keep three servants?"

John smiled.

"Well, don't we, my dear?" he asked. "It seems to me that we always have one going, one coming and one here!"

HAPPY THO' MARRIED?

There are unhappy married lives, but a large percentage of these unhappy homes are due to the illness of the wife, mother or daughter. The feelings of nervousness, the bogged mind, the ill-temper, the pale and wrinkled face, hollow and circled eyes, result most often from those disorders peculiar to women. For the woman to be happy and good-looking she must naturally have good health. Drugging-down feelings, hysteria, hot-flashes or constantly returning pains and aches—are too great a drain upon a woman's vitality and strength. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription restores weak and sick women to sound health by regulating and correcting the local disorders which are generally responsible for the above distressing symptoms.

Mrs. Dickinson.

"I suffered greatly for a number of years and for the past three years was so bad that life was a misery to me," writes Mrs. B. F. Dickinson, of Uden, Ohio, Route 4. "The doctors told me I would have to go to a hospital before I would ever be better. A year ago this winter and spring I was worse than ever before. At each period I suffered like one in torment. I am the mother of six children. I was so bad for five months that I knew something must be done, so I wrote to Dr. R. V. Pierce, telling him as nearly as I could how I suffered. He outlined a course of treatment which I followed to the letter. I took two bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and one of 'Golden Medical Discovery' and a fifty-cent bottle of 'Smart Laxative' and have never suffered much since. I wish I could tell every suffering woman the world over what a boon Dr. Pierce's medicines are. There is no way wasting time and money doctoring with anything else or any one else."

The Medical Adviser by R. V. Pierce, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y., answers hosts of delicate questions about which every woman, single or married ought to know. Sent free on receipt of 31 stamps to pay for wrapping and mailing only.

PUTS BAD BOYS IN AUTHORITY

Reformatory Puts Boys in Control.

Case of "Jimmy the Runt" Shows Efficacy of Square Methods.

Preston Reformatory, 1 one, Cal., Aug. 30—"The Runt," alias "Jimmy, the Hooker," 15, was regarded as one of the shrewdest little street coyotes the police of San Francisco had ever "picked up" at the time he was sent here to be kept out of mischief and disciplined.

"They'll never be able to reform that kid; he's a crook to the bone," exclaimed one of the arresting officers as the youthful outlaw was being hustled away.

It was a perfectly logical thing for the policeman to say. Even "The Runt" believed it, and was proud of the tribute in his warped soul, just as he was proud of the alias his gang had given him. Only one man knew better.

His name is Calvin Derrick, new superintendent at the Ione School of Industry—the man who came out here at the request of Gov. Hiram W. Johnson, to manage Preston/as he managed the George Junior Republic in New York, blocking the road between the reformatory and the penitentiary.

It was the boys' court, which Derrick established at the institution, thru which the juvenile delinquents maintain their own discipline and learn the basic lesson of social responsibility, that took the wolfishness out of "The Runt."

Product of the harsh, grinding life of cities and of parental neglect, due to the grim fight for bread, Jimmie determined in his rebellious heart to be a "square guy," which in his vernacular meant he would consistently defy authority.

He began that way. Then came his first surprise. He found that infractions of the rules were not punished by the superintendent or the guards, but by the very fellows with whom he ate and slept.

Far from regarding him with his "square guy" notions, they resented, and severely punished, his efforts to tear down the reputation for department which his company had been carefully building up and which got them certain privileges.

"You're not hurting the officers when you pull off something here," they told him "you're only making it harder for the rest of us who have found that it's best to play the game straight."

While thinking this over, he was drawn on a jury in the boys' court to sit in judgment on another juvenile offender, "The Runt," alias "Jimmie the Hooker," on a jury—just like they did in a regular police court! Wouldn't the gang laugh if they knew that?

But somehow it sobered him so that he couldn't laugh at all. After he'd helped find the accused guilty and had gone back to his work, the desire to be a trouble-maker had suddenly gone.

He had responsibilities. He had to look out for the welfare of his company, just as tho he were a man. Why, they might even elect him district attorney or make him judge if he was square with the other fellows and behaved! And right then Jimmy got his first glimmer of what laws and officers and social responsibilities were all about.

"I was watching this boy closely at the time," commented Supt. Derrick. "I could see the change going on in him just as it goes in the majority of these delinquents under this system of self government."

"A boy sent here at first regards the strong arm of law and the officers who are responsible, as his natural enemies. The rule of the club would only emphasize this spirit."

"But under our system of self government he becomes a law maker, a voter and an officer. His responsibilities toward the law then becomes identical with those of the people who send him here, and he joins forces with the State."

The story of the regenerative of the boys' court at Preston is best set forth in the records which show that punishments for infractions of rules have within the first year dropped from 404 during one week when he came into eight at the present time.

The case of "The Runt" is typical.

Few, if any, medicines, have met with the uniform success that has attended the use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. The remarkable cures of colic and diarrhoea which it has effected in almost every neighborhood have given it a wide reputation. For sale by all dealers.

CHILD OF THE TENEMENTS IS MADE QUEEN

Paris has chosen a queen, and its sovereign is her royal highness Helene, queen of roses. For a year she will reign in Paris, a sovereign without a rival, a queen without a peer. She need fear no mutiny or rebellion. She will neither be de-throned nor abdicate. For in every sense she is queen of roses and there is no one in Paris who will deny her claim or refuse to accept her beauty.

She is just nineteen and is a typical Parisienne with sparkling black eyes, rich warm lips, raven hair, and of a vivacity typical of French metropolis. Her delicately oval face and exquisitely molded nose are remarkable even among a nation of women renowned for these features.

Helene is a typical child of the Latin quarter and lives with her mother in an attic on the Boulevard Montparnasse. And here in the windows of this little attic under the eaves bloom every sort of flower from earliest spring until the first frosts wither the heliotrope in the boxes and blacken the leaves of the waxy geraniums.

It was here that she first developed her love for flowers, for in this boulevard and its numerous gardens all sorts of rare and delicate flowers bloom throughout the summer.

And evenings, after the day's work was over, Mlle. Mangelot and her mother used to walk to the Luxembourg gardens and wander through the narrow paths, bordered with rambling roses, alive with statues of nymphs and ancient goddesses. And then they would sit by the sparkling fountains, while the sun set over the palace and the couples wandered two by two and remarked on the beautiful young girl who sat alone with her mother on a bench.

The soul of those flowers has gone into the heart of Mlle. Mangelot. And so it was especially fitting that she should be chosen the queen of roses and that she should preside, a few weeks ago, over the festival of roses, one of the gayest carnivals of the year in the Latin quarter.

For years Mlle. Mangelot has been known among the artists of the Latin quarter as one of the most beautiful models. But since she would never pose for the nude she received fewer engagements than the other professional models, and had to eke out her existence with dressmaking. At this humble trade she makes five francs, or a dollar a day. But when she poses she receives $2 for an afternoon.

To the French artists it is incomprehensible that this graceful pose is unwilling to be a model for the nude. For a child of the Latin quarter to take this attitude is a surprise to all the old-timers. They call her the little American, because they always assert that the American models are so prudish.

Her favorite pictures of herself are those painted by the well-known French artist, Eduard Beque, in which she is portrayed as a child of the tenements.

OLDEST, WISEST AND THE WILDEST SERBIAN

Nikolai Pashitch, Serbia's uncrowned king, is threatened with deposition.

His triumphant administration is collapsing before a military onset. Having survived five cabinets, three wars, a violent assault, two court-martials, a death sentence and a sentence of five years' penal servitude, Pashitch is little perturbed by the prospect. But people are asking by which of his innumerable well tried ruses will the astute Pashitch maintain his power; by what maneuver will he return to office if the military action for a time succeeds and drives him to retirement.

Nikolai Pashitch's triumphs, ruses, lures, tricks, manipulations and mystifications have earned him a title more expressive than uncrowned king. It is "The Fox of the Balkans"—"Balkanaka Lystva." And in fact, since Jacob, the son of Isaac, achieved a blessing from his father by donning gloves of goatskin, never has there been such a wily, cunning, canny, astute, unseizable success hunter as is Nikolai. He understands men, and is a clever politician.

Pashitch runs the Balkans. He runs Serbia without challenge. He is the oldest, wisest and wildest of Serbian politicians; he has been prime minister five times, and when he has not been prime minister he has been the prime minister. To Serbia's parliament, the humble skupshtina, Pashitch is the embodiment of penetrating statecraft, a man of superhuman talents, who proves his genius by almost always keeping on the winning side, or, if he is on the losing side, by getting away safe with some fellow-victim's boots. This legislative organ, ever since a wise electoral law gave every Serb a vote if he pays 15 dinars—about $3—is entirely in the hands of the "petite bourgeoisie," an unpolitical class to whom Pashitch, with his profound political achievements, is a Washington, Lincoln, Gladstone, Bismarck and Gambetta rolled into one.

And all this is surprising, for Serbia's uncrowned king, the fox of the Balkans, has not the talents which make for commanding statecraft. He is a bad speaker, master of a corrupt cosmopolitanized Serbian jargon, he hates putting pen to paper, he is not a scholar or a man of strong will, and of finance, administration and high diplomacy he knows little more than the members of the "petite bourgeoisie" skupshtina.

GRAND DUKE WORRIES THE CZAR AND CZARINA

Grand Duke Boris Vladimirovitch, one of the many Russian grand dukes who hate pomp and royal state, is giving his cousin, the czar, many sleepless nights. He threatened to marry one of the most notorious women of a submerged Paris.

Boris has earned the distinction of having painted all European capitals red. Even in Paris he is called the "wild grand duke." His favorite haunts are Maxim's and the Cafe de Paris. He is a heavy drinker and is always surrounded by the smartest butterflies of the city.

Recently he thrilled St. Petersburg by getting into a box at the Aquarium and throwing paper money down among the crowd. People were astonished, knowing he is always hard up, till it came out that he had taken the money from a man from Moscow, immensely rich, who had gone up to St. Petersburg to have a good time and fallen into the grand duke's clutches. The crowd was so pleased with the largesses, and clamored so persistently for more—which the grand duke had not—that the police were called in.

The czarina is said to dislike him more than any other of her husband's relations. One day, when she first knew him, she tried to persuade him how bad his way of living was, and especially his love of champagne. But he only answered, "If you had the misfortune to be born a grand duke you would drink from morning till night, too." She gave him up after that.

He is very goodnatured, and never has enough money, in spite of his huge fortune, because he always gives to any who ask. He set up half a dozen poor Russian exiles as shopkeepers in Paris, lends them money whenever they ask for it.

When he went out to the front, in the Russo-Japanese war, he took the whole lot of dancers with him. Needless to say, he amused himself with them instead of fighting.

WORLD'S RICHEST BABY HAS NEW PLAYTHING

Vinson Walsh McLean, the $100,000,000 baby, has a new plaything which his father, Edward McLean, says is the most sensible of all his toys, the total cost of which would foot up nearly as much as the president of the United States' salary for a year. The new plaything is a farm with a goat on it.

Baby McLean, who, if he inherits all he may be expected to, will have about $150,000,000 and by the richest youngster in America, is now on his farm at Black Point, nine miles from Newport, R. I.

And, with goats and sheep and chickens and the negro boy whom his father has picked out as a playmate that the young multi-millionaire may grow up democratic, he is having a bully time.

Baby McLean, now three years old, has a gold cradle, the gift of King Leopold of Belgium, in the Washington mansion of his parents, and over $50,000 worth of playthings there. But he cares little for any of these. He would rather feed chickens or make believe plow with an angora goat on his farm. He particularly likes to work in the corn field, and next to that, perhaps to look after his chickens.

"I am going to bring my son up to be a plain, democratic American," said Papa McLean. "His farm is better for him than all the toys in the world."

Little Vincent is a beautiful child.

SENSATION CAUSE IN THAW FAKE EXTRAS

Over $2,000 Cleaned Up at the Expense of People of New York City.

New York, Sept. 1.—Thousands of New Yorkers pouring from beach trains at the Brooklyn Bridge during the night were victims of a fake sensation when they went down in their pockets for a nickel to buy a "newspaper," across whose front page in black letters three inches high they read: "Harry Thaw Shot Trying to Escape." The papers sold like wildfire, and those who bought received an even greater thrill for their money when they read below the report that Thaw was "killed," and one or more with him in his dash for liberty were also "killed or injured"—qualified, however, by the statement that the report was unconfirmed.

On close inspection the fake became apparent, as the issue was "Volume 1, No. 1," of the "Sunday Telegram," printed in Philadelphia, where no regularly established paper of that name is known. The similarity which the name bore to a New York newspaper led to protests to the police and confiscation of about 50 copies which the newsboys then had unsold.

It is estimated that over 100,000 copies of the fake newspaper had been sold in cities between Philadelphia and New York and in this city with a profit of about $2,000 to the perpetrators of the enterprise. The story was wholly unfounded, Thaw not even having attempted an escape.

A. S. of E. Notice.

The executive board of the Green River District Union A. S. of E. met in Owensboro on September 1st. On account of sickness President Balm was not present and Mr. B. C. Eaton of McLean county was chosen to preside over the meeting. The meeting was called for the purpose of arranging for the completion of pooling the 1913 crop of tobacco. The following resolution was offered and was unanimously adopted, viz: Resolved, That we recommend that the executive boards in the several counties proceed at once to complete the pooling and be prepared to make full reports of all tobacco pooled to the regular quarterly convention which will meet in Liverpool on the first Thursday in October, provided, however, that in counties where the pledges are circulated through the local union (as in Hancock and Ohio counties) pooling shall be done in the regular way and attended to by the local union.

In view of the foregoing action of the District Board we would urge that all persons to whom pledges have been sent get busy and get the tobacco in your community pooled and turn pledges in to the County Secretary of your county. If any pledges are wanted they can be had by writing District Secretary S. B. Robertson at Calhoun.

Farmers remember this is the age of co-operation not for tobacco alone but for every interest of the farmer and the time is here that our Nation, State and even the small community is becoming interested in the solving of great co-operative propositions, so let's be in front and do all that we can to aid in the great co-operative interests that must soon claim our attention both as to buying and selling.
